INTRODUCTION

This Directory contains the names and addresses of the members of the Washington Academy of Sciences and of each of the 14 affiliated societies, with the exception of the Geographic, Historical and Archaeological societies. Of the last two it contains the names of those members only who are members of at least one other society. The names and addresses of all officers of affiliated societies are included. With few exceptions, the Directory shows for each member (a) name in preferred form, (b) place of business, (c) residence, and (d) society membership. It also contains a concise statement as to each society, showing its age, organization, object, and present officers.

Where no city is given in the address, Washington, D. C., is understood; and in all street addresses in which the section (NW., NE., SW., or SE.) is not given, northwest is understood.

This Directory has been prepared and published under the direction of the Washington Academy of Sciences. About half of the cost of publication has been borne by the Academy and the balance by the affiliated societies.

In the present edition, the Editor has depended upon the secretaries of the affiliated societies to furnish correct lists of members of their respective societies and the proof has been examined and corrected for each society by the secretary thereof. The secretary of each society is, therefore, jointly responsible with the Editor for the correctness of the Directory, in so far as it pertains to the society he represents.

This Directory has been compiled and put through the press by the Corresponding Secretary of the Academy with the assistance of Mr. Wm. Parry, and has been corrected to about February 1, 1915. A few changes of later date were incorporated while the work was going through the press.

The Editor takes this opportunity to express grateful thanks to the secretaries of the various affiliated societies for their co-operation.

GEORGE K. BURGESS.

ACADEMY OF SCIENCES

THE WASHINGTON ACADEMY OF SCIENCES was organized early in 1898 through the joint action of the Joint Commission and the component societies. It was incorporated February 18, 1898. ## THE NATIONAL GEOGRAPHIC SOCIETY

THE NATIONAL GEOGRAPHIC SOCIETY is by many thousands the largest scientific society in the world and one of the most unique educational associations in existence. It was founded in January, 1888, by a small group of explorers and research students in Washington, "to promote the increase and diffusion of geographic knowledge." For the first ten years its membership was limited exclusively to technical geographers. They were ambitious that the Society should conduct explorations and researches of its own, and that it should also strive to make the study of geography more interesting in our schools and to the public at large. But to achieve these laudable purposes more funds were necessary than were provided by the small annual fees of several hundred members. In 1899 it was suggested that both objects might be secured if the Society could develop a geographical magazine of sufficient interest to be supported by the public; that a magazine of large circulation would earn a revenue for the Society which could be devoted to explorations and research, and at the same time the magazine, by reaching many thousands of readers each month, would also accomplish the second object of the Society, namely—popularize geographical study.

The Society adopted the suggestion and opened its doors to all who desired to promote geographical science—teachers, lawyers, bankers, agriculturists, engineers, physicians. Every worthy man or woman who wished to study the world upon which we live was admitted to its membership rolls—the only limitation being that he or she be nominated by one already a member—and at the same time the journal of the Society, which had hitherto been strictly technical, and which the Society had with difficulty supported, was changed so as to appeal to every thoughtful, but not necessarily technical, reader. The scientific standard of the magazine was maintained, but many popular features were added and the articles were designed to be of interest to every one.

The plan has proved most successful. To-day the Society has a membership of 350,000, an income of more than $850,000 a year, and after payment of all expenses for its very handsome magazine, has an annual sum of $50,000 to $60,000 available for geographical research and exploration. Thus the National Geographic Society, unlike every other scientific society, is supported in luxury by its magazine, instead of being cramped to support its journal.

The popularity and success of the National Geographic Magazine are justified by its contents. No magazine in the world prints so many wonderfully unique illustrations, such large, useful, and distinctive maps, or so many stimulating and instructive articles by prominent men as the National Geographic Magazine. In its educational value the magazine is probably unequaled by any other periodical.

Explorers in the most remote corners of the earth are identified with the National Geographic Society and this magazine. Its truthful narratives rival in interest the fables of old, and the wonders of photography are revealed in its illustrations.

The magazine each year makes a volume of 1500 pages, containing more than 1400 pictures (many of them being in colors), several large colored maps, and several panoramas.

Annual dues $2.00. Life membership $50.

The National Geographic Society is conducting explorations in many regions. In 1912-15, in co-operation with Yale University, it maintained a large expedition in Peru, making geographical, geological, and archaeological investigations around Cuzco, in a region which is generally believed to have been the birthplace of the famous and little-known Inca race. Other parties have been making (1913-15) a biological survey of the country east of Hudson Bay. The Society has just concluded a series of investigations, extending over three years, of the glaciers of Alaska, one of the most important fields of geographical research in America. A popular account of all expeditions is printed in the Magazine, while the technical results appear in separate monographs published by the Society.

Other activities of the Society include the maintenance of a geographical library at its headquarters, Hubbard Memorial Hall, 16th and M streets, the award of gold medals for achievements in discovery and geographical research, and a series of addresses, every Friday, November to March.

Thus the ambitions of the founders of the National Geographic Society are being fulfilled and a splendid force for the study of the world on which we live has gradually been created. More than two million people each month are reading the geographical matters which the Society distributes through its Magazine, and the study of our own land, of other peoples and other countries, is being constantly encouraged.
